tion, entitled the New-York Chamber Music Club The concerts in public halls were a song recital by Mr. and Mrs. Georg Henschel in Chickering Hall in the afternoon, and a concert by the Kaitenborn-Beyer-Hané String Quartet in Chamber Music Hall in the evening. So far as the purely artistic achievement went, all the day's doings were dwarfed by the recital of the gifted couple that warmed the hearts of a numerous and cultured gathering in the afternoon. Mr. and Mrs. Henschel have been faithful in their visits for years, and it is plainly no part of their purpose to public knowledge of song literature to any marked extent; but their art is so exquisite, so inique, in fact, in its finish, that there can be no fear that any sincere and intelligent music-lover of this generation will think their mission fulfilled. They certainly never gave keener or purer pleasure than they did yesterday afternoon. The Kalten-born-Beyer-Hané organization is still young enough to be entitled to special consideration on the score of its youthfulness, but it is working so conscientiously and diligently to reach a high standard that it is easy to overlook its defects and to bestow herest commendation upon it. Since last year it has improved the quality and the homogeneity of its tone, and acquired some of that freedom and spontanetty of utterance which is its greatest lack. Its music is not far from a painstaking reading of the printed page, but the rest will come with time There was a praiseworthy degree of it in the midtle number of its scheme last night, which was Grieg's Sonata for planoforte and violin, in C minor, in which the ambitious young leader of the party had the help of a talented young woman. Miss Edith Thompson, whom we understand to be pupil of Mr. MacDowell. New-York Chamber Music Club is composed of Messre. Augus: Spanuth, plano; Ludwig Marum, violin, and Anton Hegner, 'cello. The first and last named are well-known resident musicians. Marum, who has recently come to New-York from Chicago, is an excellent violinist, of fine schooling and thorough musical attainments. The three cultivate the extremely rich field of the planeforte trio that is generally allowed to lie fallow, so far as public performances are concerned, with evident enthusiasm and thorough taste, and will add an element to the musical life of the metropolis that will be fully worth the attention of discriminating music lovers. Their performance last evening gained in attractiveness from the informal surroundings, such as have been found so agreeable in the Astoria concerts-surroundings of a sort concerts of this sort. The small hall is excellent for hearing chamber music in. The programme contained as its instrumental numbers Tschalkowsky's elegiac trio, op. 50, in A minor-intended mmemorate the death of the composer' friend, Nicolas Rubinstein-and Saint-Saëns's, in F. op. 18. The former is a curiously unequal composition, very free in form, practically in two movements, of which the last is a long series of variations, ending in one of funereal character, particularly emphasizing the motive of the whole

There is much beautiful writing in the trio, and fine episodes, of strikingly beautiful effect; but it is characteristic of Tschaikowsky's methods beauties in the minds of the nearers. It was played with an abundance of the color and va-riety of expression that it calls for, and with a generally good ensemble, after the performers had recovered from a certain nervousness and uncertainty that were manifested at times in the first movement. The strings were sometimes out of tune in the delicate and graceful trio of Saint-Saens; but there was the brilliant precision upon which it relies so much for its effect, for it is heartless music, and pretty well devoid of really pregnant ideas. The club was assisted by Mrs. Carmine Moore Lawson, who sang a most inter-esting group of songs by Franz, Dvorak, Bungert, MacDowell and Arthur Bird. Unfortunately, she, too, took some time to reach her own artistic level, and it was not till she had nearly completed her allotted list that she was in good voice an singing uniformly in tune. It did not appear last evening that she had gained in artistic insight or in warmth of voice since she last appeared as a singer of "Lieder" in this city, a couple of years

KEEP UP THE FIGHT.

OPPOSE THEM. Dr. Henry M. Field in The Evangelist.

Dr. Henry M. Field in The Evangelist.

When the charter of Greater New-York was passed by the Legislature, we, in common with thousands of others, had doubts of the wisdom of creating another London on this side of the ocean. But we were reassured when we had offered to us an ideal candidate for Mayor in Seth Low. That he is not to-day the Mayor-elect is owing whoily to the self-ishness of one man—Thomas C. Platt!

That was a sin which has no forgiveness. It was a crime, not only against the city, but against the whole Commonwealth. It was a blow at our Republican form of government, which Lincoln described as "of the people, by the people, and for the people." This is no longer true: our government, as we have it here in New-York, is "a government of the boss, by the boss, and for the boss!" Have we not had that about long enough?

"But," I hear some timid voices say, "why talk of this now? The election is over, and we cannot help ourselves." Yee, but the consequences are not over, and will not be for four years to come. But they can be averted in part, if we take good care that the man who has betrayed us once shall not have the chance to betray us again.

For the scheming and the plotting are not ended. Though defeated in the city, Platt holds part of the Legislature—not by any means the overwhelming majority of the last year, for there has been a revolution in the State, and the Republican party has been snowed under. But the Senate holds over, so that the Republicans have still a majority there. In the House, however, the parties are nearly equal. The balance of power may be in the hands of half a dozen Independents. But if Platt can keep his hold of the Legislature he will be in a position to make a deal with Croker, so that they can divide the spoil between them. In that case the inhabitants of the Greater New-York will have to drink the last dregs of the cup of humiliation. If we need to be

Mayor Strong said yesterday afternoon that his desire was to have a memorial of the passing of old New-York, not a celebration of the incoming of the greater city. He had no definite plan as to the form, but suggested a meeting at the Metropolitan Opera House on the night of December 31, at which the general programme should include an historical sketch of old New-York and reminiscences. Even if the programme were long, the people could stav to midnight, when the new cliarter would come into force with the new year. The matter was suggested to him, he said, by some visitors who weren't at all enthusiastic about the Greater New-York. An old-fashioned levee at the City Hall had been suggested, but the Mayor wasn't certain that the alterations to the building could be finished by that time, and even if they were there would not be room for the crowds that would come. FRENCH TRAGEDY AT HARVARD.

THE FIRST PERFORMANCE OF RACINE'S "ATHA-LIE" GIVEN

Cambridge, Mass., Dec. 5 (Special).-The care and the labor which have occupied Professor P. C. De Sumicrast and his assistants for much of the last six months were rewarded to-night by the appre-ciation of the audience which was gathered in Sanders Theatre. It was a scholarly and a critical audience, disposed to be friendly, no doubt. not ready to bestow thoughtless or indiscriminate applause. It was the middle of last June when it was finally resolved that the department of French of Harvard University should prepare and present

The first performance was given to-night, and three more will follow this week, including an extra one on Saturday afternoon, of which the

If it were not known in other ways that he had made the performance what it is, it would be evident from his own magnificent acting of the of composition in its inordinate length and fruit-less repetitions, which go far to invalidate its played this part, which mist be nearly as long as that of Hamlet, were the inapiration of the whole performance. Other excellent places of acting were one, but this one expressed more than any other the meaning of the drams.

Next to and close to it, should be mentioned that of Athalie, by Miss Louise Cushing. She, too, was thoroughly true to a just sense of the import of the character which she played. She was cruel. insolent, implous, yet dignified, queenly and selfcontained. She allowed herself, no doubt, to look somewhat young for the part, but it is questionable whether any real artistic end would have been served if she had made herself look older, ugiler and more like a daughter of Jezebel. The part of the infant king, which was presented by Miss Mary Coolidge, was a charming one, and her acting was delightfully simple and sincere. There was a disconnection of the part of the infant king, which was presented by Miss Mary Coolidge, was a charming one, and her acting was delightfully simple and sincere. There was a disconnection of the part of the par appointment in Abner, as played by Marion La Meslee. For a bold and enthusiastic soldier and supporter of the true religion, he was far too soft of speech and indifferent of manner. A good and spirited piece of acting and speaking was that of Miss Grace Forbes, as Zacharia. The remaining parts were played by the following named persons:

Mabel Georges (abot Ward
Agar Miss Josephine Sherwood
For the musical portion the soloists were Mrs.
Alice Bates Rice, Mrs. Leon Wallace, Mrs. Ernestine Finh and Miss Ruggles.

An excellently trained chorus, which, however, did not sing, was composed of young women from Radcliffe College, while many of the students of Harvard appeared as priests and Jesuits. It proved impossible for various reasons to have a singing chorus on the stage. The best of these reasons was that Mendelssonn's music, which was used, provides for male voices as well as female, while the book calls for a chorus of girls only. The chorus, which was intended for the eyes of the audience, was therefore allowed only to pose and to gesticulate in expression of the meaning of the numbers which were sung. The singing was done by some eighty members of the Cecilia Society, men and women, accompanied by an orchestra of about forty members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Harvard appeared as priests and Jesuits. It

The conductor of the music was B. J. Lang. The orchestra and the singers occupied the front of the floor of the house, where they were visible, but not conspicuous. As the choruses are placed by the author at the ends of the acts, the music was made to cover the intervals when, under ordinary circumstances, a curtain would be lowered, and the performance, dialogue and music together, was thus continuous, except for a brief pause after the third act, to give the players a little rest after an uncommonly trying scene. It was in this scene, that of the prophecy, that the climax of the play was reached. put through such discipline, God's will be done! But THE ST. NICHOLAS DINNER. THE NAMING OF THE KEARSARGE.

THE PASSING OF OLD NEW-YORK. A BRILLIANT GATHERING AT DEL-MONICO'S.

> THE USUAL HISTORICAL FEATURES PRESENT-AD-DRESSES BY BISHOP POTTER, C. C.

BEAMAN AND OTHERS All the brilliancy and festivity that have marked the annual dinner of the St. Nicholas Society in past years were renewed last night, when for the sixty-second year its members celebrated the anniversady of their patron saint with the customary feast. Successful as have been the preceding dinners which have helped to keep green the memory of that ancient Bishop of Myra, who from being the patron of children and sailors came to be the saint of the Hollanders, and, as a natural consequence, of the early settlers of New-Amsterdam, the oidest members of the society were prepared to make affidavit last night that this year's dinner was the most conspicuous and noted of all within their memories.

The traditional ceremonies that are observed at the annual festivals of the society were repeated last night in all their interesting details. The colored footmen dressed in the old-time colonial costumes, the old weathercock, which, before coming possession of the society, first surmounted the old Town Hall at Burling Slip, and later pointed the wind over Washington Irving's house at Sleepy Hollow; the ancient mace of the organiza-tion and the revered three-cornered hat of the president took the foremost part always allotted to these historic adjuncts of the annual gathering of the St. Nicholas members. While not lavish, the decorations were tastefully distributed. Be-hind the president was placed the coat-of-arms of the society, surrounded by American and Holland flags, and suspended from the gallery immediately facing him was the banner of the order.

AT THE PRESIDENT'S TABLE.

At the centre of the raised cross-table was sented Franklin W. Stanton, the president of the society. and on either side of him were Bishop Potter; C. Beaman, of the New-England Society; John D. Crimmins, of the St. Patrick's Society; J. W. Vrooman, of the Holland Society; Henry W. Prince, of the Colonial Order; John A. Kasson, Reciprocity Commissioner of the United States; Nicholas Fish. of the Society of the Cincinnatt; Frederic J. De Peyster, of the Society of Colonial Wars; William Lyall, of the St. Andrews Society; the Rev. Dr. George R. Van De Water, Berkeley Mostyn, of the St. George's Society, and Colonel Charles F. James, of the St. David's Society.

Last year, in consequence of the large number of applications for seats, the stewards in charge of applications for seats, the stewards in charge of the arrangements were obliged to revert to the system which they have not followed for fully a decade, of seating their members at the orthodox long tables. The greater area, however, placed at their disposal this year in Deimonico's new banquethall allowed the society to go back to the separate tables, which have lended to induce that conviviality and friendly intercourse which have always been a prominent feature of these feativals.

A SOUVENIR PIPE.

In addition to the handsome printed menu cards and the long clay pipes, without which no St. Nicholas Society dinner would be orthodox or complete, there was presented to each guest, as a souvenir of the occasion, a briar pipe, with the bowl carved in the shape of a head, wearing the old-fashioned colonial hat.

It was just upon 10 o'clock when the president rose to begin the after-dinner oratory. After welcoming the guests with warm cordinlity, he went coming the guests with warm cordinity, he went on to say:

The St. Nicholas Society does not claim to be a distinctively Dutch society. It is the society representative of old New-York. The fact is, however, that the great majority of our members trace with pride their origin to Dutch ancestry. And from those ancesters we inherit modesty. But this is St. Nicholas Day, our day, and we feel in boasful mood. We boast of sixty-two years of peaceful growth and prosperity. Three times the list of applicants has grown so large that we have raised our limit of membership, and now the limit has again been reached. We have six hundred and fifty members on our roil. The suclety is to be congratulated upon the steady growth of the permanent fund, which amounts to Seas. We have also a commemorative fund of St.oc.

It has been said that our remarkable freedom from discord is due to the fact that our bylaws forbid all discussion of purity politics. Well, that is one reason, but there is a stronger one in the warm friendship existing among us. (Cheers.) Old schoolmates and college friends are gathered around these tables. Here we recue those friendships which have stood the test of time. We are not a dining society only. We believe in cherishing the traditions and memories of the pust. And we strive to render to the founders of this city and of this society that true gratitude which is the memory of the heart.

TOASTS TO GOVERNOR AND PRESIDENT.

Before resuming his seat the chairman proposed the healths of the President and the Governor of the State of New-York, which were drunk with musical honors. Frederic J. De Peyster followed with a response Frederic J. De Peyster followed with a response to the toast of the St. Nicholas Society. He made one of his usual humorous specches, made up for the most part by facetious allusions to those around him, which because of their happiness of point and generosity of sentiment, are always greatly enjoyed by his hearers.

Chauncey M. Depew had been selected in the first instance, to reply to the necessary toast that of "Our City." The death of William H. Paulding, his brother-in-law, prevented his attendance, however, and in his place Bishop Fotter, the chaplain of the society, took the subject. Acknowledging at the outset the kind words which Mr. De Peyster had used in referring to him. Bishop Potter begged his audience to remember that sovereign of another time who, because of the adulation bestowed upon him, kept adjacent to his throne a servitor, who, under similar conditions to which he (Bishop Potter) had been exposed, would keep the King within bounds by impressing upon him the truth of the words. "Theu art mortal."

A LAUGH ON MR. BEAMAN

"It was in something of the same spirit." Bishop Potter continued, "and with the fine scepticism of a New-Englander that Mr. Beaman, who sits next to me murmured gently, when Mr. Do Peyster was

New-Englander that Mr. Beaman, who sits next to me murmured gently, when Mr. De Peyster was in the midst of some of his best panegyrics. Bishop, this is all very well, but at the same time it is all rot.' (Loud laughter.) Unfortunately, Mr. Beaman is not a member of my union or I would submit him to ecclesiastical discipline.' After alluding in humorous terms to the difficulty of finding a speaker to undertake the task of responding to his toast, Bishop Potter proceeded: "I was waited upon by one of the stewards of this society, who informed me-I am telling you the absolute and naked truth—that the subject of four City had been passed around in the St. Nicholas Society, but that its members who had been asked to speak on the theme declined to touch it. I don't know what there is in the condition of the city of New-York which should inside such reluctance. Whatever ditches she has fallen into (laughter) there are still worse ditches into which she may fall. I can refer you to our friend, Mr. Criminis in confirmation of this. (Laughter.) In this connection, also, I would recall an answer made by an eminent Catholic prelate who was waited upon in a smoking car of a railroad train by a Protestant clergyman who undertook to convince him that there was no such place as purgantery. After the Protestant clergyman had argued and pleaded for some time the Catholic prelate at last said: Cannot you conceive any circumstances under which it might be quite satisfactory for you to go to purgatory? No. It is innovable, said the Catholic Bishop, then go to hell. (Laughter.) In eniarging upon his subject, Bishop Poiter pointed out that New-York was not a city to be ashamed of, and whatever might be he primater. If the remaining speakers were Mr. Kesson, Mr. Beaman, and the Rev. Dr. Van De Water.

COMPLICATIONS ARISE OVER THE SELEC-TION OF A SPONSOR FOR THAT BATTLE-SHIP. ALSO.

Washington, Dec. 6 (Special).—The smoke of the combat over the naming of the battle-ship Kentucky has no sooner barely blown over, leaving the wounds, however, to rankle, than another cloud appears above the horizon which may develop disagreeably for those who are concerned in the double launching next month at Newport News. Va. The sponsor for the sister battle-ship Kearsarge has yet to be designated, and, as that vessel is not named for a State, no Governor will be placed in a quandary over the selection, but the duty will devolve on Secretary Long, who will doubtless find it disagreeable enough before the ship floats.

Lieutenant Herbert Winslow, the son of Admiral Winslow, who as a captain took the Kearsarge out to the duel with the Alabama, suggested Secretary Long to-day that his wife be chosen to name the Kearsarge. The suggestion exactly de-feats the sentiment which actuated Secretary Long several days and to write Lieutenant Winslow for advice in the matter, the appropriateness of hav-ing the act performed by a descendant of the gallant commander having been apparent to all concerned in the launch. It was confidently expected that in the first place such a descendant would be proposed by Lieutenant Winslow, and in the second place that the sponsor would be unmarried, the only exception to that rule having been in an in-stance during the last Administration. By avoiding the latter precedent, well known to every naval officer, and ignoring the Secretary's evident desire in the former, the suggestion as it has reached the Navy Department struck an exceedingly unpopular chord, and were it not for another consideration its indelicacy would have caused it to be filed in the loftiest pigeon-hole.

The President was about to designate Secretary Long's elder daughter to name the Kearsarge, and would have done so had not the lamentable affilewould have done so had not the lamentance and to the results of the mountain this work. He had learned that the original Kearsarge was called for the mountain in Mertmack County, New-Hampshire, and that it was eminently fitting that the daughter of New England's representative in the Cabinet, no conflict being involved, should be chosen to carry out the will of Congress, which specifically named the modern battle-ship to commemorate the most famous fighting-ship of the Civil War. This act of the Executive would have come as a total surprise to Secretary Long, who could have had no intimation of such a thing when he wrote to Winslow—a fact, however, which, once decided upon, could hardly have deterred, but rather accelerated, his desire to give fullest credit to the distinguished parent of an obscure living officer.

The exceedingly delicate complication which has now been precipitated can searcely be anything but doubly umbarrassing to the Naval Secretary whose sense of propriety is so exquisitely attuned, and the only solution that now suggests itself to may it officers, and that one arouses no enthusiasm, is that a malden descendant of the brave conqueror of the Alabama not being discoverable, and the President's choice having been delayed, an entirely new effort be made to find a proper sponsor for the ship, leaving the selection to a meeting of the Cabinet. tion overhanging his home driven all other thoughts

HOCKEY IN A WOMAN'S COLLEGE.

IF THE GIRLS LIKE IT. CRICKET WILL BE TRIED NEXT SPRING.

Baltimore, Dec. 6 (Special).-The Woman's Col-Baltimore, Dec. 6 (Special).—The Woman's College, of Baltimore, has a hockey team. Miss Flyborg, director of athletics, to-day picked out the players, all of them lithe, strong, healthy-looking sirls, who are enthusiastic over the sport. She says she has made a study of English outdoor strong and ford suitable and hockey well suited for games, and finds cricket and hockey well suited for If played scientifically, they need not be rough, and there is more skill required in them than in basket-ball. In hockey the girls will wear tennis skirts and shoes. It is a good cold-weather game, CAN'T EXAMINE THE STEINWAY BOOKS. The application of Henry W. T. Steinway for a peremptory witt of mandamus to compel the di-rectors of Steinway & Sons, in which corporation the petitioner is a shareholder, to permit film to inspect the books of the company was yesterday denied by Justice Andrews, in the Supreme Court. denied by Justice Andrews, in the Supreme Court, Steinway has been involved in litization with his brother-members of the firm for over five years. Justice Andrews says he is satisfied that the relator has no absolute right to the writ, and so far as he personally is concerned he merely desires the examination for annoying and oppressive purposes.

and is as interesting on grass as on ice. There will be games three times a week of an hour's length. If hockey is popular, cricket will be introduced in the spring.

INCIDENTS IN SOCIETY. .

new Astoria Hotel yesterday morning, was a high-ly enjoyable and successful affair. The programme which was introduced by the "Leonore Overture No. 3," was closed with a romance of an incident in Beethoven's life, entitled "Adelahie," which was dopted from the German of Hugo Mulier by David Bispham.
